What's New In AutoCAD?

Architectural floor plans are not drawn on paper and then taped up in the office. They're designed and drawn on paper, sent to a factory where they are printed on a large, high-resolution roll of paper, then fed into the mills of the industry. There's a lot to keep track of, starting with blueprint numbers and CAD key codes. AutoCAD 2103 adds the ability to associate these numbers with specific profiles and styles in the mobile app so you can enter them more easily. If you enter a non-existing drawing profile, you'll receive a helpful message. This makes it easier to input design data in various profiles and styles to keep it all in one place. Markup Assist: The "Insert Drawing Profiles" dialog box allows you to select a profile from a mobile device or USB drive to import to your drawing and use it to edit the drawing. How to import profile data: You can import a project's folder of design and specification files from a USB drive or a mobile device. (video: 6:35 min.) Product design Faster drawing and preview This new version of AutoCAD is based on a completely new programming framework that opens up new possibilities for features and functionality. The central programming theme is that of the component-oriented approach, which enables developers to more easily provide new and additional features for new and existing customers. Thanks to this new framework, you can now preview your drawings in fullscreen, even if they contain multiple layouts. Whether you are creating or viewing the layout, you can see the complete and up-to-date information at a glance in the new easy-to-read Property Manager. Improvements in the new drawing environment and in the way that you work with layers, feature layers, and components include the following: • Multi-layer drawing: Save and switch between multiple layouts quickly. Use the Tabs button on the Ribbon and the Layouts pulldown menu to switch between the different layouts of your drawing. Switch between views using the Show/Hide button on the toolbar. • Feature layer: Use the tabs in the Layer Properties window to switch between the different views of a feature layer. Drawing Viewpoints and Viewports: A new drawing view can be created from the various existing views in a drawing and saved in a new drawing layout.
